Poetry please

To mark the launch of his seventh book of verse, Love, Of A Kind, one of Britain's best-loved poets, Felix Dennis, has embarked on his biggest poetry tour ever across the UK, Ireland and the Continent.

Felix Dennis is one of the most popular, critically-acclaimed poets of recent times, attracting thousands of dedicated fans across the globe. His Did I Mention The Free Wine? poetry tours fill theatres from London to Edinburgh, Los Angeles to New York. The American author and critic Tom Wolfe calls Dennis "the best poet writing in the English language". Others, including British poet Benjamin Zephaniah, actor and writer Stephen Fry and musician and songwriter Sir Paul McCartney are equally lavish with praise for his work.

After being diagnosed with throat cancer last year, Dennis is back with the aptly-named Cut-Throat Tour, with dates throughout September and October. Surgeons miraculously saved Dennis' stage voice, which one journalist famously described as sounding like 'Winston Churchill on steroids'. Dennis takes audiences on an exhilarating journey through poetry that spans his lifetime.
